Mandela promises 'rainbow nation'

Associated Press

A DREAM COME TRUE: Newly-elected South African President Nelson Mandela enjoys a smile with former President F.W. de Klerk, at an earlier peace conference. Mandela was sworn in Tuesday before 50,000 South Africans.

suits held court.

"The moment to bridge the chasms that divide us has come," Mandela said. "The time to build is upon us."

He pledged a society "in which all South Africans, both black and white, will be able to walk tall, without any fear in their hearts, assured of their inalienable right to human dignity — a rainbow nation at peace with itself and the world."

He made mention of the role played by de Klerk, with whom he shared the Nobel Peace Prize last year, and recalled the colleagues and comrades who died in the struggle for freedom.

And, he drove home the message that the exploitation of one race by another would not be repeated.

The ceremony concluded with a celebratory burst of cannon and air force jets, flying in close formation overhead. Trailing tinted vapor, they painted a rainbow ribbon of the new national colors — blue, red, black, green, gold, and white — across the sky.

Christ's love offered to all, MacArthur says

By AMY COWIN
Universe Staff Writer

The pure love of Christ knows no boundaries, has no conditions and is offered to all to heal with its soothing effects, said James D. MacArthur, a professor and clinical psychologist at BYU's Counseling and Development Center, at the Devotional.

"A beautiful description of the love of God is given to us by Father Lehi," MacArthur said. "Once we experience this amazing power, we have the insatiable desire to experience it again and again; we want it always to be with us."

MacArthur stressed the importance of knowing the Savior, not just knowing of the Savior, to come to understand the pure love he has for all.

One of the most important principles of the gospel is changing one's heart, MacArthur said.

"When this occurs, we love more deeply, we love more consistently, we love all that is of God and thereby love his children and love his work," MacArthur said.

This change of heart requires a fundamental change, MacArthur said, and involves not competing with, not dominating and not seeking to be above others.

"I have come to believe that the gifts of the Spirit are most available to us when we reach heavenward to obtain them, in order to give them away in Christlike love," MacArthur said.

"Love is most pure when there is no consideration of a response from the person who receives it," he said.

MacArthur revealed his "blue-line" concept. The idea is to draw a blue line around a group we work with and have that line serve as a symbol.

People can make a commitment to make people feel loved, significant, desired valuable, worthwhile and important when they cross the blue line and enter into the group, MacArthur said.

MacArthur explained the concepts of going to others, seeking to love them and to be concerned with their welfare. He counseled people to listen more, try to understand each other more, say "I love you" more, have Family Home Evening more, spend time together as families more, comfort more and love more.

MacArthur also spoke of his professional experiences.

"I have spent the majority of my professional life working with people who have troubled hearts and troubled minds," he said.

"Aloneness is one of the great maladies of our day. We must correct that through hard work, making sacrifices to notice and to reach out to others, to love one another as the Savior has commanded us to do."

"Humility requires us to set ourselves aside a bit to make room for the needs of others," he said. "The setting aside of one's self is crucial in all of our human relationships."

Y follows Church's policy; doesn't compete on Sunday

By LAEL PALMER
Senior Reporter

Members of the BYU College Bowl team set their sights for second place at the national competition this year.

They knew they couldn't take first place. The deciding game would be on Sunday, and they wouldn't compete that day. The team had been aware that they couldn't take part in the championship going into the competition, but the BYU team had never fared so well before.

"Some people were indignant when we forfeited," said Bill Atkinson, team member. "But the majority of the people there supported our decision not to compete."

The team is one of several BYU sports and academic teams to forfeit competition in events held on Sunday. For some, the policy has been long-standing, but for teams like Coach Lynnette Bird's, the decision had to be a personal one.

Bird's BYU extramural softball team had been playing since the early morning hours of last year. Now the sun had gone down and the lights were on the field. Most of the other teams had gone home or back to their hotels, but the BYU team had lost only one game that day and were in the winner's bracket for the tournament championship.

Bird wasn't watching her team. She was watching her watch.

There were only two games left in the tournament and less than an hour before midnight. The first game went quickly. Bird's team scored seven runs in the first couple of innings, and the opposing team seemed to be struggling.

Then there was one game left. After talking for a moment with her team, Bird walked with her assistant coaches to the dugout across the diamond.

"We forfeit," Bird said as she glanced at her watch one more time. "It's Sunday."

It wasn't a hard decision for Bird to make to forfeit, she said.

"We gave away the trophy, but we felt it was more important to represent our church through BYU," she said.

"The other team was pretty upset," she said. "They told us that they didn't want to win the tournament by forfeit. They wanted us to play."

BYU does not have an official policy concerning Sunday activity, but BYU upholds the Church tenant of "keeping the Sabbath day holy," said Brent Harker, Associate Director of Public Communications. "It is a matter of personal conscience."

For the students competing in the National Student Advertising Competition, the decision was not personal.

"When the BYU Administration found out the competition was going to be on Sunday, they put their foot down," said Mark Wilkinson, an advertising student from Great Falls, Mont. "We had no choice in it. They just said, 'no.'"

The team faxed a letter to the competition officials, telling them BYU would not be able to participate in any of the Sunday competitions.

"Within an hour, we heard back from them," Wilkinson said. "They offered to move our part of the presentation to Saturday."

Despite the happy ending for the advertising team, Wilkinson still feels the choice should be a personal one.

Crowds rejoice as PLO police arrive in Gaza

Associated Press

RAFAH, Gaza Strip — PLO police, wearing green fatigues and berets adorned with eagles, arrived on Palestinian soil for the first time Tuesday, as thousands of chanting Palestinians waited for the first sign that self-rule was beginning.

The 150 police made "V"-for-victory signs and chanted, "We are coming to you, Palestine," as they left Egypt.

As word spread that the Palestinian police had arrived at the Israeli-controlled Gaza side of the border station, a crowd of excited Palestinians swelled into the thousands, and Israeli forces struggled to keep them a mile away.

Lines of Israeli police vehicles, blue lights flashing, were stationed on the road and in surrounding fields. Reinforcements were brought in, and Israeli forces fired rubber bullets and doused the crowd with water cannons to drive them back.

The Palestinian police crossed from the Egyptian side to the Israeli-controlled side of the border station in a line of buses and U.S.-donated military vehicles. One policeman sported a poster of the man who was once Israel's No. 1 enemy — PLO leader Yasser Arafat.

Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin signed an accord last week that arranged for 9,000 Palestinian police to guard Gaza and Jericho once Israeli soldiers withdrew.

The Palestinian police were delayed for hours on the Israeli side of the border station while Israeli authorities checked identity papers and luggage. Israeli officials said the Palestinians would be given guns.

In Jericho, a halting start was made toward self-rule as Israeli and PLO officials met to outline the transfer of power. Israeli army officials said police could enter Wednesday, and it would BYU's home-grown heroes. Starting tight end Terrence Saluone, who finished his high school ball at Provo High School, has transferred to Weber State University.

Saluone and his teammates are very excited to be getting a new tight end to their caliber," said Weber State offensive coach Mark Gorscak. "We recruited him hard out of high school, he was a premier player in our school and he still is."

Saluone has played a key role in the Cougar offense for the last two Saluone started against Utah State and had a spectacular touchdown catch against New Mexico during his sophomore campaign. He had four catches for 73 yards during the season. In 1992, he scored one touchdown and his longest reception was 47 yards.

In 1993, Saluone took over the starting role at tight-end and had 25 receptions, while playing all 11 games. He finished the season with 344 yards receiving and two touchdowns. He averaged 31.3 yards per game and 13.8 yards per catch.

Astronomers picnic in Ohio during last eclipse until 2012

Associated Press

SANDUSKY, Ohio — A few months back, astronomer George Kaplan was sitting at his desk at the U.S. Naval Observatory in Washington when he had a vision.

Why not have a dozen or so of the nation's finest astronomers put on Hawaiian shirts and straw hats, get on a plane and fly to Cleveland for the last major solar eclipse in the United States this millennium?

On Tuesday, Kaplan's audacious vision was fulfilled, more or less.

True, not everyone wore Hawaiian shirts. There they were, a dozen astronomers, in addition to four assorted hangers-on, deplaning in Cleveland, hopping into rental cars and trekking to East Harbor State Park near Sandusky, just in time for a

U.S. doctors divided over new diet drug

WASHINGTON — A diet drug widely prescribed in Europe, and under consideration for use in the United States, has been found to cause brain damage in monkeys, a Johns Hopkins University researcher reports.

Dr. George Ricaurte, an assistant professor of neurology at Hopkins, said a study of neurons in the brains of squirrel monkeys showed damage months after exposure, to a drug called dexfenfluramine.

"There is definite cause for concern that humans treated with dexfenfluramine may be at risk of brain injury," Ricaurte said Tuesday. "The damage is persistent and possibly permanent."

Dexfenfluramine is widely prescribed in Europe to suppress appetite in clinically obese people. Ricaurte said some patients take the drug for a year or more.

Another neurology expert said that although the Hopkins study does show a change in chemistry in one part of the brain neurons, this does not mean that the brain has been damaged.

"This has been one of the most studied drugs I've ever heard of, and there is no evidence of brain damage," said Dr. Richard J. Wurtman, a neurologist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Gov. Leavitt announces scholarship program

SALT LAKE CITY — A new program has been organized by the state, to provide college and university scholarships to the spouses and children of slain police officers.

Gov. Mike Leavitt announced the Governor's Golden Shield program during Tuesday's Utah Peace Officers Memorial at the Capitol Rotunda.

"Our peace officers deserve our deepest respect and gratitude for the daily risks they take to keep our communities safe," Leavitt said. "The Governor's Golden Shield, like the memorial today, is one symbol of our regard and respect."

The program is a collaboration of the governor's office, Workers Compensation and the Utah System of Higher Education. In the past, partial scholarships were available through the Workers Compensation fund.

Federal policy change alters Y hiring process

A federal employment policy change in the use of Form I-9 is forcing BYU Employment Services to tighten hiring procedures.

The change pertains to a part of the Immigration Reform and Control Act. The act was formerly enforced by immigration officials, but will now be enforced by employers.

All new BYU personnel — students, faculty, staff, administrative, approved part-time, on-call and temporary employees — must complete an I-9 form, on or before the first day of work.

Penny Morrell, Student Employment Manager, suggests people come to their first employment interview with the proper documentation to fill out Form I-9.

International employees need both their passport and visa to fill out the form. U.S. citizens need either a passport or social security card and their driver's license.

Police investigate daycare center's records

SOUTH JORDAN — Police have seized the records of a daycare center because a 3-year-old boy, in their care, was pulled from a canal and later died.

Investigators are examining the records to determine how long children stayed at "A Place to Stay and Play," which is exempt from state licensing because it offers only hourly, storefront baby-sitting for periods of four hours or less.

Chief John E. Parker said investigators reviewed about 20 percent of the records by Tuesday afternoon. Several documents indicated instances where children stayed at the daycare for longer than four hours, he said.

Under Utah law, a daycare center must be licensed if "it provides continuous care and supervision for four or more children under 14 years of age ... for at least four hours."

Mac Archibald, who wandered away from the center Saturday, died at Primary Children's Medical Center early Tuesday, a hospital spokesman said. The boy had been in critical condition after being pulled from a canal behind the center.

Local buying frenzy triggered by gun bill

By JEANETTE WAITE
Universe Staff Writer

Gun sales are shooting up to 300 percent since the House voted to ban assault weapons last week. The proposed bill triggered frenzied crowds in gun shops throughout Provo, wiping out gun supplies.

"People are in a state of panic trying to get the supplies that may not be available soon," said Robert Anderson, an employee at Gunnies in Provo. "This bill is not popular here in Utah. Gaming sports are a way of life."

The bill bans 19 weapons and copy-cat models. It also bans magazines or ammunition clips that hold more than 10 bullets. The House version is similar to the proposal the Senate approved. But a House-Senate conference committee must now build a final draft and send it to President Clinton.

Meanwhile, citizens are heading to the gun shops and reacting like they did to the Brady Bill last fall. The Brady Bill required a waiting period for handgun buyers.

"Our customers are just regular citizens who are concerned," said Blaine Murri, manager of Park's Sportsman in Orem. "They were buying those items that won't be allowed. If you tried to buy any of those banned items right now, you wouldn't be able to. The wholesalers and retailers are out."

BYU director of administrative services and police Capt. Michael Harroun, said, "People are sick and tired of crime. They want something to be done. And this [bill] is something they can sink their teeth into."

However, critics claim this bill isn't the solution. The National Rifle Association (NRA) quotes FBI statistics that indicate less than 1 percent of the United States' murders were committed with assault-style weapons.

Harroun notes that on campus, the police seldom deal with weapons violations. He said the incidents that have occurred have mostly involved hand guns.

"The bill won't have a dramatic impact," Harroun said. "But it's a step in the right direction. There is a lot of public pressure on this emotional issue. The message going to Congress is this — We want something done about crime."

Others claim the bill has no place in America's democracy. "The bill has dangerous provisions. It is clearly unconstitutional," Anderson said.

"Our customers are passionately against anything that takes away their right to bear arms," Murri said. "It's an invasion of their privacy."

Rep. Karen Shepherd voted in favor of the ban, while Utah's two other representatives, James Hansen and Bill Orton, opposed the bill against assault weapons.

"This bill is spitting in the wind, by trying to eliminate the weapon rather than dealing with the criminal," Orton said.

Constitutional or not, the bill has gun buyers cleaning up the shelves in local stores. "One guy bought $2,200 worth of clips [gun magazines]," said Norman Van Wagenen, owner of Van Wagenen Finance Gun Shop in Provo.

senior recieves $30,000 om national scholarship

By ROBERT BROUGH
Universe Staff Writer

BYU political science student has awarded the prestigious Harry S. Truman Scholarship. David Barlow, 23, a senior from Idaho, was one of 65 students from 57 institutions, awarded the $30,000 grant for graduate studies. "It was a humbling experience," Barlow said. "I had a chance to talk to a number of the applicants from the western region and they were very good, so I felt humbled to be chosen among them."

This is the first time in over 10 years that a student from BYU has received this recognition," said David Davis, professor of political science.

In addition to the grant, each of the students will attend a week-long leadership seminar in Missouri this summer with several prominent political leaders, and will also receive a leadership internship next summer with the executive branch of the federal gov-

Sixty students will have a chance to get a head start on their college career this summer. BYU's Honors program is providing an opportunity for entering freshmen to apply for "The Summer Honors Experience." The program "will not only give these students a giant step toward graduation, but also gives them a chance to come to campus early and establish friendships with others that have similar interests and talents," said Neal Kramer, assistant dean of General Education and Honors. The program lasts the eight weeks of summer term and gives students a nine-credit head start over other freshmen. The courses offered to the students includes the following: History of Civilization 201 and 202, Religious Education 121 and Honors 214R.

In addition to the academic courses offered, the students and faculty will have the opportunity to attend firesides, gatherings at faculty homes, study sessions, lectures by invited lecturers, concerts, films, field trips, and other co-curricular and extracurricular events.

creative experts recognized Young Craftsman's Fair

By MARGARET NELL
Universe Staff Writer

Science students created marionette tables, built engines and illustrated how DNA becomes a protein. The Young Craftsman's Fair, Monday and Tuesday at BYU. David Fawson, a Roy High School innovative teacher, said the fair helped students to be experts, and an opportunity to show off and gain recognition for what they can do. The students manufactured a grandfather clock, a go-cart and blueprints for a house, all of which were demonstrated in the ELWC Ballroom and Student Court.

Only 500 students from 40 high schools participated, said Loren Martin, an associate professor of technology education and construction management.

The fair is an "excellent opportunity for students to display skills not traditionally recognized," Martin said. The purpose of the fair is to give students and teachers an opportunity to see what other schools are doing and to thereby gain more ideas, he said.

One of the most popular portions of the fair was the new problem solving contest. Students were divided into groups and given 90 minutes to solve design problems, using materi-

Disabled students find sight, sound

By ROBERT BROUGH
Universe Staff Writer

No one said getting through college was easy. But for 200-300 BYU students, the university environment carries additional challenges. Services for Students with Disabilities (SSD) is a volunteer program sponsored by Student Life, to assist students needing special assistance.

"The volunteers are the eyes, the hands or the ears of everybody involved in the program," said Julie E. Preece, coordinator for SSD.

Kristen Cox, 24, a senior from Sandy, majoring in special education, has a visual impairment and relies upon others to help her through school.

"If I didn't have help through school, I couldn't do it," said Cox. "I couldn't get through school without help from the outside."

SSD provides a variety of services for disabled students including the following: typing, campus travel, classroom note taking, reading and scribing tests and textbook reading.

The textbook reading program is one of the most important services provided by SSD, said Rochelle Rabe, mobility specialist and volunteer coordinator.

The program consists of student volunteers who read textbooks or portions of textbooks on tape, for those who suffer from learning disabilities or visual impairment.

"For the learning disabled or the visually impaired, it allows them to get through the material as quickly as anyone else, so they don't fall behind in their classes," said Daniel Taylor, specialist for the visually disabled.

"This way they don't have to spend two or three hours on something that should only take a half an hour," said Taylor.

Melissa Brooks, 20, a junior from Santa Ana, Calif., majoring in public relations, has a learning disability, ADD (Attention Deficiency Disorder), which affects her ability to ignore outside distraction. She has used the textbook reading program.

"When I am able to listen to the textbooks on tape, all of the outside distractions are blocked out and I absorb it a lot better," said Brooks.

Classroom note-taking is another vital service provided by SSD. Note-takers are assigned to students who are deaf or have a chronic pain or illness and are unable to write down the information.

"If you are deaf and unable to get your notes in class how are you going to get by?" said Preece. "They depend on our volunteers to help."

"It does make the difference between success or failure," said Rabe. "Without the volunteers, nothing would work and nothing would go on."

"There are a lot of places that come to BYU looking for volunteers, but sometimes it's nice to come home and help your own," said Preece. "There are a lot of people on this campus who really need the help of their own fellow students to get them through school."

"We realize that anything students can give us is extra, and we really appreciate it because it really means the difference between having a successful program and a unsuccessful one," said Preece.

"The program rests on volunteers who are dedicated," said Cox. "It needs to be taken seriously because this is someone's academic life you are getting involved with."

Wymount transfer policy favors single students

We recognize the efforts of the BYU's housing department to provide well-kept housing for single students at low costs where standards can be protected. These housing policies are unique to our university.

But, the recent transfer policy that encourages BYU students to live on-campus and then transfer to Wymount is potentially harmful to many married students. There are currently 1,700 people on the Wymount waiting list. Those on the waiting list have paid a $25 fee to be on this list under the conditions that housing would be available on a chronological, first-come, first-served basis.

The housing department changed the chronological policy when they decided to implement the transfer policy this spring term. On this policy, a resident living in Deseret Towers or Helaman Halls can have priority transfer to married housing at Wymount.

This could be a good policy for the housing department to encourage more students to live on-campus, but it is unfair to the 1,700 people currently on the list who had to stand by this term as 15 students in on-campus housing were given precedence over those already on the list. The housing department should not have made this policy retroactive.

This policy was never communicated to those who had paid to be on the waiting list and went into effect before any of them were notified.

While the housing department has made good efforts to keep down costs of on-campus housing for singles, it overlooks married students who cannot live in Deseret Towers or Helaman Halls to get at the top of the Wymount waiting list.

The policy overlooks the need to treat equally the concerns of married and single housing problems. Married students should have equal access to living in Wymount housing complexes.

Take for example a single student who is thinking of getting engaged soon and wants to live in Wymount. This student could move into Deseret Towers or Helaman Halls for one semester and then move into Wymount upon getting married. What about the 1,700 other students who are on the waiting list, but cannot move into single, on-campus housing? It is unfair that they are bypassed so that the university can fill on-campus housing.

While the BYU housing department is a business entity that can implement this transfer policy to encourage single, upperclassmen to live in the dorms, it should be considerate of the needs of married students who struggle through waiting lists and high costs to find a place to call home.

Africa's ethnic violence awakens Americans out of apathetic attitude

When my father came home with the news that we'd probably be moving to Zaire, my first question was, "Where's that?" My next question was, "Great! When do we leave?"

You see, I was a geek, a nerd, pick a term—at least, that was how I had been packaged and labeled at MacArthur Middle School on Fort Meade, Md.,—and I was so unimpressed by this rule that I was ready and perfectly willing to move to deepest, darkest Africa to get out of it. So I did and I learned.

We think of Africa as a problem handed down to us from the past. We try to make up for our colonial fathers' division of the continent, separation of ethnic groups and rape of the land by pumping a few dollars into new, democratic economies.

I learned that there is much more to the development of a country than the monetary generosity of "Free World" powers. It takes an honest government, which isn't easy to find, and a population willing to wait for substantial change.

A country cannot flourish under a ruler who diverts national funds to his own Swiss bank accounts and bumps an entire flight so his wife can bring home the fruits of her latest European shopping spree. A logical criticism? Yes, but we let it happen anyway. Why?

I saw the excitement that came with the first semblance of a Zairian free press. A friend came to our home with a wide grin and a newspaper in one hand. "Look at that criticism! Can you believe it's in print?"

Later, I heard of despair as the press and the country collapsed economically, politically and socially.

I winced as I watched a videotape of a street I knew but hardly recognized because of the rubble. I heard of the closing of my school and the looting of the youth hostels my mother had accused me of calling a second home.

Where were the concerned colonizers? Where were the United Nations peace-keepers, or the international coalitions for humanitarian relief? Eating frozen dinners and watching the famine in Somalia, I suppose.

Real culture shock came when I moved back to the States and stood unable to comprehend the 20 choices of mascara I was suddenly faced with and news broadcasts that covered high school basketball, but ignored human rights violations in the Sudan and political bloodshed in Zaire.

It took the deaths of two presidents to focus world attention on ethnic violence in Rwanda. What will it take to find the rest of the lost continent? There is a Maasai saying: "Though we are far apart, our spirits share the same earth and the same sky."

Africa may not have rescued me from terminal geekhood, but the drums still beat in my heart.

Sports heroes are people, too

Jeff
Hanson

By JEFF HANSON
Universe Sports Writer

I heard a good one the other day.

"Did you hear about the guy who went to the fights and an NBA playoff game broke out?"

Well, OK — it's not that good, but it's a perfect segue to my topic for the day.

The newly found NBA version of hockey spilled onto the Spurs' home floor last week when Dennis Rodman undercut Jazz forward Tom Chambers, then threw a knee into a cutting John Stockton underneath the basket. People were not pleased. Rodman was tossed from the game, and had to sit out game three.

As I entered the Delta Center Thursday night, I could tell Rodman was in for it. The fact that Madonna was there at the game to cheer on her latest plaything was fuel for the fire, and the air buzzed with excitement. I could literally hear Jazz fans licking their chops in eager anticipation for the Worm's arrival.

Utah was to have their first lynching in decades.

The Jazz sponsored a sign contest for the night, and it seemed that every third person in the building had a poster depicting Rodman, Madonna and even Tonya Harding in various positions and images. "Rodman is a Pri-Madonna," was a good one. I also liked "Squash the Worm into Oblivion." I didn't know white-bread Utah folks could be so darn creative.

At every time-out, with every station break, the jumbo tron would focus in on these signs. Most were quite sardonic and downright cruel. I looked down at the Spurs bench, and saw Rodman staring at the tron, seeing his sentence passing before his eyes.

It was then that I actually felt sorry for the goon.

I happen to be a Dennis Rodman fan, because I know of some of the garbage he's had to go through to get to where he is. I don't think the average fan knows that he was passed from foster home to foster home as a kid, finally to be taken in by a suburban white family and raised as one of their own. I don't think the average fan knows of his divorce, and of the pain he feels being separated from his daughter.

In fact, I don't think I really understand what he's been through.

I'm not condoning his behavior on the court. I don't think there is a place for trash-talking and cheap shots in professional sports, especially since every major sports league in the country markets their game as a family-safe form of entertainment. However, I do know that there are dozens of players in the league that do the same thing every night in the NBA, and don't get the press because they don't bleach their hair, wear tattoos, and play as hard and as well as Rodman.

Thursday night gave me a view of the man that I had never seen before. We make meticulous note of every time he gets in someone's face, but do we notice the times he helps an opposing player up off the floor, or pats a kid's head at courtside? I do.

Talking to him after the game, the one thing he wanted to do was see his daughter. No mention of Madonna, no talk about paring or carousing. He missed his kid. He had nothing bad to say about Utah fans, and spoke with respect about the Jazz.

Funny thing — Jazz players had nothing bad to say about Rodman, and many expressed admiration for the way he played. One Jazz player even said he wished he could have as much fun playing basketball as Dennis Rodman did.

If the people that work, live and play with him understand his style, maybe it's about time we all gave the guy a break and get with our own problem-filled lives.

Go figure. I do get worried when grown men and women yell death threats at a player as he's leaving the arena after losing a game. Maybe there really is a use for electro-shock therapy.

Organ donors save lives

To the Editor:

Thank you Daily Universe and Laura Lyons for writing about organ donation. Perhaps you would be interested in another case example and in another view of transplants: My 16-year-old son Christopher received a donor heart on February 3rd. Last November his heart was suddenly and permanently damaged by a virus. He faced a short life, a year or two, at most, as an invalid. Chris was so weak he could barely get out of bed. By contrast, he was able to celebrate the one month anniversary of the transplant by climbing at the Rock Garden for three hours. Two months after the transplant he can once more ride his mountain bike in the hills above Orem with his buddies. There is good reason to believe he will keep resolutions to serve an LDS mission and then become a physician. Admiration and love for the doctors and nurses who saved his life brought him to the second resolution. The almost tangible faith of many who prayed for him has strengthened the first resolution.

Contrast Christopher's happy situation with this: There are many more people needing donor organs than there are donor organs available. The ratio of patients needing hearts to donor hearts available is probably worse than 10 to one. Babies and young children are particularly likely to die while waiting for a heart. Yet many usable organs go unused. Often the intense emotions associated with an untimely death interfere with a family's decision to donate.

Family members who have thought about organ donation before the fact are much more likely to agree to donate, especially if they know it was a loved one's wish to donate organs. Please discuss this with your family. You can get more information and a donor card for your wallet by calling 1-800-833-6667.

My family will always be grateful for parents of another 16-year-old boy, a boy who died, anonymous to us, on February 3rd. They turned their tragedy into our boy's new chance at life, a life anonymous to them. That boy would have died whether or not Chris received his heart. Christopher, however, could not have lived without a donor heart. He could have died at any time while we waited. But Chris didn't die, and he won't die just yet. Christopher will now live on.

Principles, not mandates

To the Editor:

First of all—I know this is going to be news-flash for some—the "official" Church position as of recent publications such as the "For the Strength of Youth" guide and other public pronouncements such as those made in General Conference, does not include anything specifically about "R" films. We are currently admonished to maintain high standards in our choice of movies, music and books — by high standards we should understand those things that promote the values inherent in the Restored Gospel. This is currently the "official" Church position. I suspect that many of the anti-"R" faction likes to be told what to do, but then that wasn't the point of the plan, was it? The sad news is that we all have brains and should use it — we fought for a free agency, we should think twice about rendering it so quickly. Here are a few reasons why I think we haven't heard anything in a couple of years from the Brethren that have been specifically directed toward "R" films.

1. The movie rating system is often contradictory.
2. Those that rate the movies do not have the same value system that we as Latter-day Saints should have, and therefore, their ratings do not accurately reflect what we should consider appropriate or inappropriate.
3. A convert in India has no idea what a high moral standard is.
4. Despite what the brilliant rocket scientist asserted the other day in the paper about rating the book, it's not a viable option — a movie is offensive, the book probably isn't. Read the book? Either way, if it's trash, we shouldn't expose ourselves to it.
5. Didn't someone say that the best way to teach men correct principles and let them govern themselves? The high-standards principle is clear — we should all be free to ment it on a personal level. I'm glad to hear the Brethren teaching principles instead of issuing mandates — have the free agency and the intelligence to decide what is appropriate. And by the way, anyone that thinks that "Schindler's List" is any way inappropriate for a mature person doesn't belong at a university.

Paragliding gives wings to Utah adventure-seekers

By VICKI SIMMONS
Universe Staff Writer

Paragliding lessons range from $60-$90 and provides an activity that doesn't take all day. Tim Tasker, a beginning paraglider from Jackson Hole, Wyo., said he got started in paragliding because he can work in the morning and then paraglide in the afternoon. He said, "It doesn't take all day."

Flying lessons begin with an explanation of the equipment, the concept and physics behind paragliding and the vocabulary used.

After flyers understand what the paraglide does, they will learn to stand in the wind and control the equipment. This is done by manipulating the draft to keep the paraglider in the proper position while on the ground.

The flyer then runs down the training hill with the paraglide and kites it. With speed, flyers improve direct control and will get a few feet off the hill for a first flight.

Learning to bring down the paraglide is also taught before actually flying.

Novice flyers usually remain in the air for 60 seconds over the training hill. More advanced flyers will fly for 20 minutes or longer.

Tory Kooyman, a senior from San Diego, majoring in English, said, "The first time I flew, I felt my stomach in my throat." He said that it is the closest thing to flying. "Once you are up there, you are just floating and hear nothing but the air."

Youth dancers perform scenes of 'Train' book

By JENNIFER SPATIG
Universe Staff Writer

The Young Dancemakers will present "A Train Going By My Window" May 13 and 14 at 7:30 p.m. in the de Jong Concert Hall.

Tickets to the production are available at the Music Ticket Office. Prices are $5 for the general public and $4 for children, students, faculty and staff.

The Young Dancemakers is made up of about 100 members of the children and teens creative dance program. Children involved in the program range in age from 5 to 18.

According to Chris Ollerton, co-director of the children and teens creative dance program, the idea for the production of "A Train Going By My Window" is taken from the book by Wendy Ann Kesselman. The book tells the story of a girl who takes an imaginary train ride to various places in the world.

Dances in the production are taken from parts of the book. "We give the dances the flavor of the places she visits," said Ollerton. The story was organized into a dance production by choreographers under the direction of Patrick Debenham, associate professor with the modern dance division of the dance department.

"A Train Going By My Window" completes a trilogy of dance productions. Anna Roberts, left, and Amanda Thomas are two young dancers who will perform with the Dancemakers this Friday and Saturday in the deJong Hall.

The Original Music Association of America, informally known as MAA, has relocated its headquarters from the Washington D.C. area to Provo to facilitate musical success to new musical groups according to Andrew Wilson, MAA's executive producer.

MAA is a membership association who's charter is to help build a wider audience for all styles of original music by launching a National public radio satellite show called "MAA's Jukebox" that will broadcast original music to over four hundred radio stations across America, said Wilson.

While trying to provide venues for the musical artist in reaching their audiences, the association will also sponsor "Open Mike Night" at Pier 54 every Wednesday at 8 p.m.

Nuggets not so Golden in Utah

By VALERIE BIRD
Universe Sports Writer

The Utah Jazz beat the Denver Nuggets 100-91 at the Delta Center Tuesday night to take a 1-0 lead in the Western Conference semifinals.

Karl Malone led the Jazz with 25 points, while John Stockton had 17 points and 11 assists in the game. Jeff Hornacek added 15 points and Jeff Humphries chipped in 12 points.

Dikembe Mutumbo led all Nuggets with 20 points, 10 rebounds and four blocked shots, while Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf added 16 points and Laphonso Ellis scored in 11 points and 11 rebounds.

Mutumbo, who is the premier shot blocker in the NBA, gave the Jazz trouble in the paint. So, the Jazz had to rely on their outside shooting. Malone was hot from the 15-18 foot range.

"We did a good job getting on his right hand and taking him away from the things that he wanted to do," said Jazz center Felton Spencer.

Denver went on a 16-2 run at the end of the second and the beginning of the third to take the lead 55-53 with 9:05 left in the third quarter.

"We broke down at the beginning of the second half, but we came back and got on a little run of our own," Spencer said.

But, the Jazz responded with a run of their own and never looked back the rest of the game. At one point Utah led by as many as 18 points.

Denver, which is the youngest and least experienced team in the NBA, never gave up and made the Jazz work for the win.

"They came out ready to play and we withstood that," said Jazz guard Jeff Malone. "They had to play well to beat Seattle so we knew they had a good team coming in."

Some insights on the NBA and Major League Baseball

Shooting the Breeze

By Josh Luke

Just shooting the breeze out of the heads, wondering if the umpires can hear me...Orel Hershiser kicked dirt on my face Sunday night. Yours too? If you were watching ESPN he did. I had to laugh when ESPN showed the "basecam" that is hidden under second base.

Anyway it is prediction time. Anyone who follows the Choosing-Posing column knows I am no genius, but here's my meaningless guess.

The Phoenix Suns will win the NBA Championship because "Sir Charles" wants to retire after this season, and he wants at least one more year to show off to his golf buddies. The Suns will beat the Pacers—why? The Pacers are hot right now and don't stand the Knicks.

The Jazz beat the Nuggets in five. Suns beat the Rockets in six. Knicks beat the Bulls in six. Pacers beat the Bulls in six.

Next round, Pacers upset Knicks. They have nothing to show for finally getting the Jordan-less Bulls. Come June—take a chance, live a little bit. I am not going to make any predictions on the Suns and Jazz, if you are suspicious, you will already know what I have chosen—although I am betting for the Jazz. Utah fans have the Mailman finally have the support to win it all.

Next year look for Dominique Wilkins to return to the Hawks. Penny Manning to sign with the Hawks if Charles retires, and the Hawks if not. Jerry West and the Lakers will also land Bulls center Scott Williams, who is from Los Angeles, and somehow retain Jason Kidd before next season.

After watching the Nuggets-Sonics series in which Seattle was anything but Super, I can not help but wonder where Dikembe Mutumbo has been all year. He played like the NBA Most Valuable Player. He gets my vote for most improved player. I like Gary Payton as the MVP, but Hakkeem will get the award.

The Sonics lacked leadership and their internal problems such as Payton and Ricky Pierce squaring off at halftime of game four in Denver led to their early playoff exit. Sorry Seattle fans—if you need help dealing with the let-down, talk to a Portland TrailBlazers fan, they've gotten pretty used to playoff let-downs.

In the National Hockey League I am not that schooled, but the Rangers seem to be the dominant team, and the Sharks seem to be extremely lucky.

In the newly realigned baseball divisions I will take Atlanta in the National League East, St. Louis in the Central, and the Dodgers in the West. The Expos for the first National League wildcard team. In the American League I take the Yankees in the East, Cleveland in the Central, and Texas in the West—Texas still needs what they have always lacked, pitching. The American League will probably see the free-agent stacked Baltimore Orioles as the first wild-card representative—in any case the wild-card team will come from the Eastern Division where all of the teams could probably place first in any other division.

In order to sum up the worthlessness of my predictions, I will steal a quote from my father, who taught me just about everything I know about sports (not to strike his credibility or anything). That and a quarter will get you a cup of coffee—"decaf" of course.

Cougars sweep twin-bill from two different teams

By STEVEN E. SHERANIAN
Universe Sports Writer

Both the Regis Rangers and the Grand Canyon Antelopes were eclipsed yesterday by the BYU baseball team.

The Cougars took game one from the Rangers 7-0, and then went on to beat the Antelopes 12-8 in game two. "We came prepared to play today," said Coach Gary Pullins. "Yesterday was a little foggy day for us."

In game one of the double-header, senior pitcher Bryan Swapp kept the Rangers from crossing home plate in giving BYU their first home shut-out since Mike Neilson held Colorado State University scoreless in 1992.

"I was thinking, it sure would be nice to have a shut-out," said Swapp. "It was kind of an ugly day—the saving of some bad pitches and some umpire calls really helped us out."

Game one also saw David Bayles hit safely during his last at-bat, to extend his hitting streak to 23 games.

The first two and a half innings of game two of the double-header were a tough thing for the Cougars to watch, as the Grand Canyon Antelopes capitalized on some BYU mistakes to take an early four run lead.

Junior pitcher Kevin Foderero pitched a complete game for BYU, with Ryan Hall starting his first game of the year in the catcher position.

"I think we were both a little nervous out there, and some pitches got by me," said Hall.

It didn't take long for the BYU bats to come alive though, and the Cougars scored 12 runs through the next four innings, including a Ryan Hall three-run dinger in the sixth inning, his 24th home-run of the season.

A question and answer session with a BYU sports personality

What made you decide to come to BYU?

When I was in High School, I played volleyball for a club team which played in the Junior Olympics. Because of that exposure, I was recruited by Pepperdine, UC Irvine, and BYU. I decided to give BYU a look because I had heard so much about Coach McGown.

Have you been pleased with your experiences at BYU?

Yes, very. I've met a lot of people and made some really great friendships.

What do you plan to do once you graduate in December?

I'm waiting to hear from the National Team. When I figure out where I stand with them, I can make some firm decisions.

Do you have any plans to play professionally?

I'm hoping to play for the National Team. I've been told that if I don't get on the National "A" Team, I should be able to get a position on the National "B" Team. If the National Team doesn't work out, I've thought about playing volleyball in Europe.

Do you plan to do anything with your degree in psychology?

I picked psychology without being sure what I wanted to do with it. Right now, I'm tossing the idea around of going into Law School or getting my MBA. Whether I play professional volleyball or not, I definitely want to get my graduate degree.

ETHAN WATTS

What about the 1996 Olympic team?

What I need to do is get on the National Team and play really well. That would give me a chance to play. If players like Karch Kiraly and Steve Timmons decide that they want to come back and play, it will make it even harder to get on the team.

Have you thought much about playing on the professional beach volleyball circuit?

Playing on sand is very different from playing on a hard court. I've played on hard courts so much that it would take a lot of adjusting to play beach volleyball professionally.

How do you think the Cougars will fare next year?

Right now they're trying to fill a few key positions. I'm sure that the players will step-up and play well next year.

FOR WOMEN ONLY

So you've found the man you'd like to marry. You can even agree on most things. But there's one thing you really want him to understand.

Your engagement ring is a very personal tribute of his commitment. You want it to be just perfect. He thinks the most clever way to buy your ring is to go to one of the many "wholesalers" and get you a standard ring and an adequate diamond. If he would only go to Wilson Diamonds!

Once they show him how to recognize quality in a diamond, he'll see that his "wholesale deal" is not worth what he thought. This is something your Dad taught you — quality doesn't come from some guy who sells from his house and says he has a "deal" for you. This seems especially true in something as important as a diamond ring.

Besides, at Wilson's you wouldn't be limited to choosing from a few standard styles, but could get the ring you really had your heart set on.

It's perfect. Wilson's guarantees. Wilson's unmatched selection of personal styles. Wilson's peace of mind. You won't have to compromise anything. And with Wilson's guaranteed prices, neither will he.

Teaching English in Asia brings rewards, hardship

By SOPHIA CHANG
Universe Staff Writer

Teaching English in Asian countries may not be all it is cracked to be, said several returned missionaries who have served in Asian countries.

More going east, prospective teachers should be concerned about their working status in Taiwan, Hong Kong, and understanding respecting the cultures and being to render quality teaching, the returned missionaries added.

Shumway, 22, a junior in economics, BYUSA vice president and a returned missionary from Taiwan, said it was not a good idea for a single returned missionary to go back to Taiwan to teach.

But, it is illegal to teach without a permit, which is hard to get in Taiwan, Shumway said. "Secondly, returned missionaries who teach English there have caused significant problems."

An assistant to the president, Shumway witnessed two Americans were thrown in jail.

Lewis, 22, a sophomore from Provo, said he was told by his mission president not to come back to teach when he was serving as an agent with the Taiwan Taichung Mission.

He added the concerns about illegally teaching and immorality, many returned missionaries who teach in Taiwan do not pay taxes.

Many of them just want to earn money and come home," Lewis said.

Gacy gets easier death than victims, says killer's prosecuting attorney

Associated Press

JOLIET, Ill. — Outside, protesters shouted "Kill the Clown!" Inside, John Wayne Gacy quietly went to his death early Tuesday, more than fifteen years after he tortured and murdered 33 young men and boys in his home.

Staffers at Stateville penitentiary strapped Gacy's rotund body to a gurney, inserted an intravenous line into his right forearm and wheeled him from his cell to the execution chamber 15 yards away.

The injection of three drugs was interrupted by a malfunction, but prison officials said it appeared Gacy did not suffer.

"He got a much easier death than any of his victims," said William Kunkle, who prosecuted Gacy and witnessed the execution.

"I don't think anything he has gone through has been the smallest part of what he has put us and our families through. He got off easy," said Vito Mazzara, whose brother, James, was killed by Gacy.

Some of his victims thought the affable remodeling contractor, who often dressed as a clown, was going to show them a clever prank when he handcuffed them and looped a rope around their necks, after luring them to his suburban Chicago home.

Others, according to testimony at his 1980 trial, anticipated pleasure as Gacy subjected them to sexual sadism.

According to trial testimony, his victims endured unspeakable pain. At least one, who managed to escape, testified that he begged Gacy to kill him rather than continue with the torture.

His victims were destined for the makeshift graveyard Gacy had constructed in the cramped, muddy crawl space beneath his home where most of them were found.

take several days to complete the handover.

In Rafah, both the Palestinian police inside the terminal and the thousands of people, awaiting a glimpse of them, were joyful at the arrival, which came after two days of delay.

Three buses, heading to the Gaza terminal, honked their horns as they made their way through the throng to pick up the police.

The crowd cheered, clapped and shouted "Shabiba, Shabiba," the name of the youth wing of Arafat's Fatah movement.

Israeli soldiers fired stun grenades and rubber bullets to keep the crowd from flowing down the road toward the terminal building.

The crowd responded by throwing stones and bottles. Several people in the crowd were injured in the pushing or by hurled objects.

Hundreds of Palestinians tried to crowd into a military base in the town of Deir al-Balah that is to be taken over by the Palestinian police. Israeli troops used jeeps to push back the crowd.

In Jericho, PLO officials had to wait outside the gate of the military headquarters because no one had told the guards they were coming to meet Israeli officers.

Health care industry lobbyists give big money to congressmen

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Eleven members of the House Ways and Means health subcommittee were the first in Congress to take a crack at President Clinton's health care reforms, a distinction that has brought financial prosperity.

They have been showered with nearly $600,000 in contributions from the health care and insurance lobbies during the 1994 election cycle, according to a review of campaign reports through March 31.

The $579,352 total from lobbyists known to represent health care interests marks almost a three-fold increase over the same period in the last election cycle.

"Rarely do we see a more direct correlation than this: Put a piece of legislation before a panel, and watch the money come in," said

Ellen Miller, executive director of the private Center for Responsive Politics.

The total is a mere fraction of the millions in political donations, expected to be spent this year to influence the landmark legislation.

"Quite frankly, we want to gain access to those who are in a position to make progress in those areas that interest us," said John Carson, governmental affairs director for the American Podiatric Medical Association. "It's as straightforward as that."

Carson's group has already donated more than $25,000 to subcommittee members.

The biggest recipient of health care money in the 1994 cycle is the subcommittee's chairman, Rep. Fortney "Pete" Stark of California. Stark got more than $100,000 from health and insurance interests.

Utah adoption process not as simple as some may think

By MIKE RICKS
Universe Staff Writer

It was an emotional experience for the Smiths to have their first child, but it wasn't a doctor that put the baby into the arms of Roger and Maureen Smith — it was an attorney.

The Smiths had their first child through adoption.

Many people think adoption is a simple process that places unwanted children in stable homes. But it is an emotional and prolonged process for the biological parents, the parents seeking adoption and the adopted child.

"Over 50,000 families in the United States experience this event each year," said Carol Brown, an adoption worker at Utah State Bureau of Vital Records. "In 1992, there were 1,370 adoptions in Utah."

The age of children adopted ranges from infant to teen-ager. Most parents give birth to their own children. Adopting couples think some of these families take this gift for granted.

"Many people don't understand the emotional impact adoption places on a couple simply trying to start their own family," Maureen Smith said.

She said adoptions are more difficult to obtain in the 1990s, than when the Smiths adopted their first child in 1968.

Dean and Danelle Ricker of Spanish Fork have been trying to adopt a child for two years. They improved their chances by filing with three adoption agencies: Wasatch Adoptions, Pacific Northwest and LDS Social Services.

In March of 1993, they thought their prayers had been answered when a mother in Utah approved of the Rickers adopting her baby boy. But a week before the Rickers were to receive the baby, they were notified that the child had been given to a family in New York.

The grandfather of the baby, who is prominent in the Utah community, thought his name would be ruined if the baby stayed.

"Our relationship is stronger, and we know one day we'll be blessed with a miracle and adopt our first baby," Danelle Ricker said.

The average family waits three years before adopting. If parents are specific about the physical characteristics of the baby, they often have to wait up to 12 years.

"Couples must wait a few years to adopt because there is an average of three families that want to adopt, compared to only one available baby," said Carol Stenger, a clinical psychologist for Utah State Social Services.

Most adoptions in Utah are done through Utah State Social Services or LDS Social Services. Each agency has lengthy requirements.

"The state requires each family to pass a home-study review," Stenger said. "This study is very detailed, and when finished, we know a great deal about the family."

In the review, public records are checked to establish that parents seeking adoption have no felonies. If a felony has been committed against another adult or child, the parents are not allowed to adopt.

Couples must have no previous record of child abuse. If they were abused as children, they must go through therapy. An application must also be filled by parents seeking adoption.

"The application is virtually an autobiography of your life," Danelle Ricker said. "It was difficult to prove we were good parents by writing on paper."

Parents must give a financial statement and include a picture of their family in the application. Usually, parents with two or more children are not permitted to adopt because of the number of people seeking adoption with no children.

Adopting parents can't be 40 years older than the child, but must be at least 20 years older. The couple is required to list four references, which the state guarantees to check.

An adoption committee then interviews the parents and determines if they are qualified to adopt. Even if the committee determines the family can adopt, there may not be a child available for adoption.

"When there are no children ready to adopt, the couple is put on a waiting list with other families seeking adoption," Stenger said.

LDS Social Services follows many of the same guidelines as the state. They place approximately 150 children into adopted homes each year, 98 percent of which are newborns from unwed mothers.

"In addition to the requirements of the state, a reference from the couple's LDS Bishop is required," said Dave Albrecht, a LDS social worker. "The couple must also have a temple marriage and hold a current temple recommend."

LDS services require an adoptive couple to have been married three years and determined infertile by a doctor. If a fertile couple has been married for three years and have had a baby, they can then adopt.
